BYDNEY PARLIAMENTARY REPORT.

(From the Bootsman.)

THE joke-spiced Essence of Parliament which Punch serves up weekly to his readers during the session is not a whit more amusing, is often, indeed, much less amusing, than many a bona fide "Parliamentary" report to be found in the Sydney papers. In our last Australian files, there is a report of a debate on a Bale of Liquors' Licensing Bill, in the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, which will furnish fair samples of the ludicrous tone and Assembly of New South Wales, which will furnish fair samples of the ludicrous tone and temper of the majerity of the present deteriorated race of New South Welsh senators. A Mr. Harpur, "the hon. member for Patrick's Plains" (very recently, we believe, a shepherd on Patrick's Plains), proposed that Australian publicans should be permitted, as before, to keep their houses open on Sunday from 1 to 3 p.m. The hon, member pointed out that the working-man had as much right to get liquor on the Sunday from the public house, his cellar, as the man in a higher social sphere to obtain liquor from the from the public house, his cellar, as the man in a higher social sphere to obtain liquor from the cellar in his private house; and that it was absurd to suppose that any law, which would not be avaded, could be passed to deprive the working man of his expected indulgence. All this was sensible enough, but the sense was instantly obscured by some absurd rant about the approaching triumph of Democracy. Democracy, Mr. Harpur affirmed, "had never yet been represented in that House." Is not he a member of it? Would "ourrier," as in France in 1848, be a distinctive addition to the signature of a present ruler of New South France in 1848, be a distinctive addition to the signature of a present ruler of New South Wales? The working men had not felt their power, the honorable member informed his brother working men in "Parliament," and the other members whose election is almost equally owing to the overwhelming influence of working men's votes. "Men aiming at social distinctions had carried the elections." The Australian working-class howtions." The Australian working-class, however, now sleeping, will soon rise and roar and rend like a lion. Religious, and all other organisations, will fall before it, says its specimen and spokesman, who seems to think anarchy the whole duty of a statesman. There

SYDNEY PARLIAMENTARY REPORT

"the working-man must have his glass of grog on Sunday." Keep the public-houses open on Sunday, or there'll be chaos come again. It is a pity that a common-sense cause should have been rendered ridiculous by such raving advo-A Mr. Palgleish, who seconded the amendment proposed by the pastoral opponent of the pastoral interest, gave some telling information as to the crime-and-hypocrisy-causing tendencies of the Forbes-Mackenzie Act in Scotland, cies of the Forbes-Mackenzie Act in Scotland, but he, too, made himself a laughing-stock. Wishing to have a rap at some legislative opponents, he mentioned that he had met them in public-houses on Sundays during unlawful hours. Only fools, says the proverb, kiss and tell. To nobblerise on the sly, and then, to damage an adversary, to reveal the breach of law, forgetting you shared in it, seems at least an equal manifestation of folly. There is something very dignified in the idea of these law-makers turned law-breakers dodging the police and slinking into publics by back-doors.

The hon member for Patrick's Plains having The hon, member for Patrick's Plains having is something exquisitely bathetic in the anti-climax with which he concluded his tirade,

The hon member for Patrick's Plains having been requested to withdraw his amendment, in order that another might be substituted for it, and having refused to do so, a censor of manners arose and informed the "shepherd of the people" that he ought at least to act as one gentleman might be expected to act towards another. The censor was shut up by a Mr. Forster, who very plainly intimated that the less said about gentlemen in that House the better. Mr. Forster supported the original better. Mr. Forster supported the original amendment, and became involved in a contro-versy as to whether or net any mention of gingerversy as to whether or net any mention of gingerbeer could be found in the Bible. Mr. Love imagined that he had proved that public-houses ought not to be opened on the Sunday, when he uttered the sanctimonious truism that "if the law of God commanded us to keep the Sabbath, then the breach of it was a sin." Mr. Wilson, with unfair personality, remarked that the hon. member for Patrick's Plains appeared to consider intoxicating drink a necessary. Mr. Wilson, doubless, was justified in scouting the notion that "all Scotchmen went to bed drunk every night," but—even admitting the accuracy of the very questionable assertion—we cannot discover the ground of his boast that less drunkenness is patent in Scotland than in any other country on patent in Scotland than in any other country on Sunday. Mr. Wilson, however, though in favour of closing public-houses on Sunday, ridiculed the statement which had been made on his side, that the wines of the old world were not intoxicating, and instanced the over-taken condition of Noah as a proof to the con-trary. Debates on tectotalism of this kind are trary. Debates on teetotalism of this kind are as drolly incomprehensible here as was the reported reading of the 7th chapter of Joshua in the American House of Representatives, the other day. Mr. J. Garrett, on behalf of the teetotallers, made some philological remarks, in which he said, "any classical scholar would bear him out"—a safe challenge of contradiction probably, since most likely none of his hearers knew more of or about the classics than himself. Mr. Irving was almost as entertaining on the other side. He hoped that all his hearers were church-goers, in which case he said they would each be sure to drink a glass of sherry after their return from church. The discussion of another clause of the bill elicited from Mr. Dangar the comically frank confession that "they were not very particular about oaths in the interior—he could speak from experience."

(From the Speciator, February 15.)

THERE is a political thaw in Russia, and the ice is bending and cracking in all directions. The stream runs swiftly underneath, solid as the surface appears, and since the first great breach the whole mass has been rapidly giving way, and the debris threaten soon to mark the speed with which the silent river dashes along its course. The passionate desire for a freer life, so long suppressed by a superincumbent weight, is revealing itself at every turn, and the resolutions just passed by the Assembly of Nobles at Mescow show the direction which the new movement is intended to take. The proceedings of that body are well worthy the most attentive study. Though only 300 in number, and elected from among the nobility of the single government of Moscow, they notoriously represent the party which calls itself par excellence Russian, and will be followed by other assemblies of all the central and western governments, and by all that in Russia can fairly be counted to belong to the middle class. Indeed, the vote on the resolutions taken on 24th January, displayed the existence of something which, were not the scene laid in Moscow, might be termed a popular excitement. The speakers were eagerly followed, the "noise in the hall was excessive," and there was a movement against "orders" and uniforms which, in a country waster stock produced in a continental manifesto as the Grand Lexis of suggest the remedies are continent of credit," and they have drawn up an address to the Emperor which Englishmen, educated to believe that a Russian noble is but a Tartar in a European coat, will read with a surprise not widely distinguished from admiration. It is an English address. The nobles recount the mischiefs which visibly threaten the State, the hatred springing up between class and class, the constant violations of law, the "instability of the unit of credit," and the dread of a national bankruptcy, and then, in five short paragraphs, suggest the remedies required "to satisfy the existing wants of society." These remedies are all practical, measures of detail, as far removed from the inflated rubbish usually produced in a continental manifesto as the Grand Remonstrance was from the Rights of Man.

1. The first remedy is to limit the authority of continental manifesto as the Urand Remonstrance was from the Rights of Man.

1. The first remedy is to limit the authority of the officials. The Russian nobles, both from patriotism and from pride, detest the "Tchin," the organized bureaucracy, which, taken from every class, badly paid, and corrupt to the core, executes the Imperial will. Their hatred is shared by the people, and General Bustrom, when he appealed to the soldiers to punish the students as boys who would one day enter the Tchin, and take bribes to oppress them, revealed the depth of a feeling entertained even in the army, which is exempted from their control. The nobles apparently did not dare to demand the only efficient check on these men—a personal liberty law, or habeas corpus—but they suggested the next best reform. They want to make the officials elective, a law which would make them responsible to the Assemblics—call them Quarter Sessions—instead of the throne. Every one, moreover, is to be held the throne. Every one, moreover, is to be held responsible before the law for his acts—that is, liable to prosecution if he oversteps his authority. It must not be forgotten that in Russia it is not the laws which are defective; they are excellent; the laws which are defective; they are excellent; every tyrannical act, unless indeed ordered direct by the imperial councillors, being a breach of positive statute. If, therefore, the nobles could only secure the fair administration of the law, if, for example, the judges were appointed by the Assembly, the Tonin would be placed in irons, would be as directly responsible to the people as the officers of an English municipality. There would remain the necessity of paying them properly; but this is not a practical difficulty. Local taxation is not yet heavy in Russia, and the sum which the civil servant extorts in bribes might be distributed in a tax. One or two governors have, we believe, consolidated their fees in this way, raising large salaries in the shape of annual we believe, consolidated their fees in this way, raising large salaries in the shape of annual gifts from each house, and then doing indifferent justice. This prayer may be granted yet; for the emancipation compels Government to reorganise the police and the judiciary, and the easiest way of paying the new employes is to leave the Assemblies to do it.

the easiest way of paying the new employes is to leave the Assemblies to do it.

2. The reform of the Tchin is the first step, but it is not complete without a reform of procedure. A trial in Russia is a frightful affair, the procedure being, as in India, so loaded down with appeals, intended as a check on oppression, that every claim is a chancery suit, and a man accused of a grave offence may be kept some years in confinement before the charge has been heard. Such cases have actually occurred, and it is their knowledge of this delay which makes Russians ready to pay any bribe rather than run the risk of being arrested for trial. The nobles, therefore, demand trial by oral evidence, and evidence upon oath. It is only written proceedings which can be spun out to this inordinate length, and a judge liable to removal for taking bribes has no motive for postponing an audience.

dinate length, and a judge liable to removal for taking bribes has no motive for postponing an audience.

3. The next step is to right the finances. The Russian Government, forced to maintain a European position with only an Asiatic revenue, has, for a century past, struggled with financial entanglements. Of the thirty-five millions a year which it raises from every source twenty are derived from a spirit monopoly, which has compelled it to order the priests to urge the people to drink. A tectotal movement started some years ago was wifelly crushed lest the State should suffer, and the people can always, by passively abstaining from spirits, bring the Government down to the ground. The credit of the State stands high, and the deficit is not large, but the Government keeps up a floating debt in the shape of a paper currency of almost incalculable amount. This currency has been debased by excessive issues during the Crimean war, its value has begun to fluctuate violently, and every form of business is menaced with disarrangement. The remedy would be parliamentary control, but the nobles are practical, they ask for what they can get, and suggestasyet only an open budget. That has been granted in form at all events, though the absence of audit, the habitual secrecy of the bureaux, and the power which the Emperor exercises of taking as much as he likes, all tend to impart an air of unreality to the official sheet. There is frankness, however, in the Emperor's avoval that the the household costs. 272 000 air of unreality to the official sheet. There is frankness, however, in the Emperor's avowal that the household costs £75,000, equal to £1,500,000 on a budget of the English amount, and which, when it is remembered that it does and which, when it is remembered that it does not include a heavy expenditure on building, and is only intended to supplement the enormous private wealth of the Imperial House, must be pronounced extravagant. The financial difficulty will yet be the strongest lever in the hands of the Constitutionalists, and it will be examerated by another. exasperated by another.

4. The Government scheme of emancipation has hopelessly breken down. The peasants, on 3rd March, 1863, will, it is true, be free, but they have refused everywhere to give up their right to the land. They will neither pay which, in a country where social position is defined by military grades, was ominous of a nation. The nobles must yield to their fate, contented to know, as they say—and the sentence is for men so situated indicative of unusual nobleness-that with serfage the "corner stone of the social evils of Russia was knocked stone of the social evils of Russia was knocked awsy."

5. Lastly, they ask a boon which of itself comprehends all political rights, "the freest discussion in print." Under any other despotism this would be the most hopeless of all their requests; but Russia has laws of its own. The Press for the last eight years has been free to a strange extent, freer than that of Austria, ten times as free as that of France. Social questions are discussed as freely as in England or Belgium, and even politics, under certain well-understood rules. To assail a Minister would be to invite arrest, but one may urge the reform of his department. To censure the Emperor would be to demand a sentence of exile, but it is possible to praise the British constitution, which every thinking Russian studies, as democrate once studied America. The immediate cause of this freedom is the liberality of the censors, but the dynasty seem to have no fear of discussion. Nobody wants to upset them if only they will move forward: and a consciousness that they are alone in Russia, that between them and a Socialist republic—the real tendency of the people—there is nothing, gives them a nerve and confidence wanting to the "elect of eight millions." The Czar has already expressed himself favourable to the abolition of the censorship, and if the assemblies can only secure the right of electing the judges before whom actions for libel must be tried, the position of the Tchin will not be one to be envied. Decently paid, responsible to local chambers, and scourged by the Press, those pests of the empire may in a generation come to be not more hated than French gen-

THE "REVUE DES DEUX MONDES" ON THE TURP.

On some points, as a people, we are singularly sensitive to external criticism; on none more so than on those connected with the sports of the field. To tell an Englishman that his boots may be better made, his dinners better served, or his rooms better furnished, is to go no way towards exciting his bile. The most prejudiced will grant that it may be a matter of habit or of taste. But that any foreigner should have the temerity to pass in review the "Turf system" of this country—to exhibit to us our Derby, our Newmarket, our Tattersall's—to show up our trainers, our jockeys, our bookmakers, and our betting men, with their peculiarities of manner and costume, is almost incredible. In no unfriendly spirit, however, be it said, and with considerable power, the Revue des Deux Mondes exhibits the "scenes et maurs du turf" Anglais. The view taken is eminently French; the writer deals in the most minute description, mistaking cause for effect, and assuming as necessaries the merest accidents of a system. He paints a charmingly poetical picture of the English Turf; touches lightly enough on the inconveniences of bookmaking, touting, betting places, and the "dernière espérance d'une noble maison, le dragon silè sur le dos duquel un gentilhomme ruiné espère franchir l'abime," &c.; exhibits a knowledge of racing slang, and an occasional ignorance of racing facts; and evidently regards dust, champagne, wooden dolls, pink bonnets, and crinoline as the sustaining forces of the English Turf.

We will not conduct our reader through these details, which are familiar to most

We will not conduct our reader through these details, which are familiar to most Englishmen; but, as the racing season of 1861 has closed, it will be no unprofitable task to survey the position of the British Turf, and to make M. Alphonse Esquiros's article a basis for our remarks.

Until very lately, we have been accustomed to regard the Turf as a great national pastime. We must now reject that name for one more identical with its extent and interests, and call it an institution. We do this with much regret; but a speculative science can hardly be regarded as the pastime of a people. We believe that it becomes year by year less identified with the sport of the nation. With the exception of one or two great saturnalia, a racecourse is no more a scene of enjoyment, a fete nationale, than the Stock Exchange or the Bourse. Take away the great southern and northern holydays, the Derby and St. Leger, and the racing world presents one vast scene of unhealthy excitement, calculation, jobbing, and chicanery. So thoroughly has the national sport been turned into a business, that the information required compels the admission of every provincial meeting into the columns of the most fastidious journals.

Personal vanity and the desire to be suddenly rich are the main causes of this unhealthy state of things. Formerly the proprietors of the great racing studs were the nobility and the gentlemen of wealth and position. Little temptation to err was ever held out to them, and they were bound to surport the honour and intensity. ation to err was ever held out to them, and they were bound to support the honour and integrity of their order. In process of time, as the means of locomotion increased, the readiest mode to a flattering freemasonry was opened by a congeniality of pursuits; and the acquisition of a racing establishment by men of lower grade naturally followed. Mutual interest broke down the party wall. In cases where funds were insufficient a partnership has been entered into, and the ramifications among a different class of men have so extended racing operations as totally to change the features and the character of "the Turf."

But the expenses themselves have induced a of "the Turf."

But the expenses themselves have induced a system of betting and bookmaking, based upon scientific principles, in which it is not so much a question of abstract excellence in the horse, as his excellence for a particular purpose. And yet we are asked to believe that the motive principle and maintany of the Turf is the improvement of the breed of horses for national purposes! Is is not rather an indisputable fact that there were never before so many worthless animals in training, and that the early calls but they have refused everywhere to give up their right to the land. They will neither pay rent nor offer a compensation, and there is no power to compel them. You cannot collect the rental of a great country by moving troops every quarter day, and the only alternatives are to destroy the noblesse, to the permanent injury of society, or to provide a State compensation. Payment for the serfs is impossible, for they are twenty millions—worth £40 a head. The nobles, therefore, suggest that the lands should be apportioned at once, and to the lord. The matter would then be settled without a yearly demand. Compensation is to be given for the obrok, and other direct losses, by the State, which will find the resources it the Emperor who has enfranchised them. The peasants, who will not pay rent, will not, it is thought, resist the Emperor who has enfranchised them. The scheme is a reasonable one, but it is obvious that it cannot endure for long, and we suspect that the ultimate solution of the difficulty will be found in life pensions to the immediate sufferers, and that the hobles, as a permanent class, must trust to their own energy, the rising value of their wild land, their ownership of all cities, mines, and manufactures, and perhaps to trade, of which they are not ashamed, and for which they have great facilities. You cannot get more hay out of a field than there is grass in it, and all the financial juggling in the world will not pay at whose accidents are graphically described by M. Esquiros, seems to be an absurdity; it gives opportunities for the grossest robberies; it places temptation before those least able to withstand it; and it brings the honest and legitimate sportsman before the world in a false position. Formerly, the possession of a racing stud was the mark of an honourable station, in these days, it is too often allied with well-grounded suspicion and distrust.

One of the advantages attendant upon English sport is the increased energy that it calls into play, the legitimate occupation it gives to many who might otherwise swell the poorrate or people the county gaol. Hunting, shooting, and racing, all fulfil their objects in this respect. Huntsmen, second horsemen, helpers, keepers, watchers, trainers, jockeys, and stable-boys may all thank the national mania that gives them employment. But the racing should become a mere cold matter of calculation, usrelieved by that geniality which has redeemed sport in times gone by from every charge: that it should be itself the foundation of the facts and statistics which my investigation of the subject has afforded; and, if you will shall list ally be well-grounded suspaid of the facts and statistics which my investigation of the subject has afforded; and, if you will shall list ally be will grounded suspaid the facts and statistics which my investigation of the subject has afforded; and, if you will shall list ally be with the Newcastle and Stable occurs, in the facts and statistics which my investigation of the satisfact of the facts and statistics which my investigation of the subject has afforded; and, if you will shall list list by with which and statistics which my investigation of the satisfact of the facts and statistics which my live with my surver way to he many the matter more generally known.

In the colony of New South Wales, staty miles to the north of Sydney, the Newcastle and Mattagen was an all fall from the second, survey beave been worked of the facts and statistics which ter of calculation, unrelieved by that geniality which has redeemed sport in times gone by from every charge; that it should be itself the hotbed of vices which oppose honourable exertion, the temple of illicit barter, excites some curiosity, net over-complimentary, in minds unaccustomed to regard it from the same point of view.

It is not remarkable that the French writer whom we have quoted above should have struck upon some of the salient points for the exercise of his pen. But we should have been much surprised had those salients yielded to his attacks. He atrikes the surface he levels his ordnance at our jockeys, their assumption of fashionable life, their oaths, their champagne suppers, their cigars, and their their assumption of fashionable life, their oaths, their champagne suppers, their cigars, and their "bonnes fortunes;" these "joujous du turf," who "inspirent des passions fortes et romanesques.' The bird's-eye view he has taken shows him their power, their capabilities, their vices; but it does not exhibit to him the peculiarities of a system which is accountable for them. It has not occurred to him that weight is at the bottom of these secilents; that when the Turf requires of these accidents; that when the Turf requires a race of men or boys whose weight it is to vary from about five to eight stone, and not go beyond it, the demand will more than equal the supply; that when we attack the weight under which the good, bad, and indif-ferent are to be brought to the post, we call in question the age at which the horses are to run, and raise a host of which the horses are to run, and raise a host of lornets about us, whose only hope is in handicaps. When boys are placed in a situation where discipline ends and temptation begins, we can find excuse for the fall, but nene for the system. As a general rule, children introduced to the dissipation of men are not long in acquiring a taste for it; the taste must be gratified; and the principles of honesty, however insisted on, are not so rooted in the Turf as to prevent error.

Nothing marks so decidedly the character of the present system as the position and the tactics of its supporters. In twenty or thirty years we have become familiar with even a new vocabulary to distinguish the men and the measures by which the Turf is disgraced. Prophets, tipsters, and welshers—the parasites of the ring—are flourishing upon the infatuation or the ignorance of society. Pay a visit on the eve, or the settling day, of any of the great races to the doors and windows of certain sporting journals, and see the motley groups, whose interests vary from half-a crown to some few sovereigns, who care nothing and feel nothing for the sport, or the generous animals concerned in it, but whose whole soul is bent upon the return for their pitiful outlay, Nothing marks so decidedly the character of animals concerned in it, but whose whole soul is bent upon the return for their pitiful outlay, and whose knowledge is bounded by the oracular outpourings of professional imposition.

In 1853 the Government did something by the abolition of open houses for the reception of deposits on races. It stopped for a time that fatal facility to ruin. It saw its middle and working classes unfitting themselves for their legitimate occupations, and encouraging a thirst which could never be alaked by honest means. It destroyed, therefore, or blocked, the direct road to the workhouse and the gaol; but it is powerless to stop the by-lanes which equally conduct the traveller to those receptacles. Does the system of deposit flourish less surely because less openly? Ask the welsher who has just been kicked out of the enclosure how many of his fraternity he has left behind, who has just been kicked out of the enclosure how many of his fraternity he has left behind, accommodating the golden-fleeced lambkins within, and what remedy is proposed for the annihilation of these advanced works of demoralisation. Legal remedy there can be none. It must be left to the feeling and measures of the gentlemen of the Turf, whose interest lies in vindicating the integrity of their pursuit. They must cease to regard their horses at one moment as the property of the public when it suits their book to do so, and at another moment as their own. It must be "p. p." with them throughout. The Turf to flourish in its natural soundness must be free from "milkings" and "scratchings" and other dark deeds. We must do the Jookey Club the justice to say that it has not indulged in its proverbial blindness upon some late occasions; but verbal blindness upon some late occasions; but the Turf receives a severe blow when an emi-nent member of that body ventures to dictate the terms upon which a favourite is to start. Such conduct must lessen the influence which men in high positions hold. It sets an example which is ever ready to be followed, and it paralyzes the hand which, in nine cases out of paralyzes the hand which, in nine cases out of ten, is the only substitute for the law.

Unfortunately, the racecourse holds out to the young and unsettled of the middle and lower classes a delusive road to fortune, stripped of the steady energy and perseverance which makes wealth valuable. They will not regard the moral of the classic allegory which makes Plutus to descend from heaven with "halting steps and slow," and to rise from hell only with the activity of a Mercury. It remains to be seen with what success the outposts of robbery may be attacked in the season of 1862; and we may take a further opportunity of examining some more intimate dangers of the system in which the "worst enemies of the man appear to be those of his own household."

AUSTRALIAN COAL.

AUSTRALIAN COAL.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir.,—I have read with care the leading article in your journal of the 20th October last, in which you have very forcibly set forth the difficulties which beset the subject of ocean steam navigation, and you state that, as in the case of the Australian colonies, those difficulties are increased in exact proportion to the distance from the supply of fuel.

Of the general truth of those remarks, and of their important bearing on the commerce of Great Britain, there can be but one opinion; but when you proceed to suggest a remedy for the difficulties in question, and you speak of the so-called recent discovery of coal in Tasmania, you have been unconaciously led into an error, and to the expression of an injustice, as affecting the extensive coal-fields of New South Wales, which latter, as I shall presently show, are not only adequate to supply all the steam fleets of the world for centuries to come, but that they have been for many years profitably supplying the very want which you have so ably expounded.

Having for a long time been impressed deeply with a conviction of the importance of the great coal-fields of Australia, I have endeavoured, since my arrival in England, to bring this subject fairly under the notice of her Majesty's Government, and with this view I addressed a letter to his Grace the Duke of New-about forty mules wide by sixty miles in isingut, and contains no less than eleven seams of coal. Mr. W. Keene, the Government examiner of coal mines, says that—

"The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd seams are worked in the Illawarra district, south of Sydney, at Mount Keira, Bellambi, and Bulli; the 3rd, 4th, 6th, 6th, 7th, and 8th seams are worked at Newcastle and Wallsend, and at Minmi and Tomago on the Hunter River; the 9th, 10th, and 11th at East and West Maitland further up the Hunter."

As regards the capability of the colony to furnish coal, Mr. Keene states that—"The present appliances of the collieries in work are equal to the production and ahipment of 20,000 tons weekly, and this quantity can be readily increased so as to keep pace with any extent of demand. The average price for good screened coal is 1se, per ton at the ahipping waiths. Locomotive engines draw the coals along tramways from the collieries to the shipping wharfs, where steam cranes and other facilities are in action for the ready loading of vessels of large tonnage."

The wharf at Newcastle is one-third of a mile in length, and the river there is often crowded with vessels of all sizes up to 1200 tons, loading coal to all parts of the Southern hemisphere.

Vessels going from the colonies to India, China, and the West Coast of America are now constantly loading with coal at Newcastle, which they take at a low freight, instead of paying for stone ballast.

The Illawarra coal seams are about forty miles south of Sydney, and the seams now in process of being worked are eituate some distance up the sides of the mountains. The mines readily drain themselves, while the trucks, in running out of the mines, are kept from getting too much way upon them by a horse fixed behind. The full trucks, in decending the side of the mountains, are used to draw up the empty ones. The coal is shipped at present from Wollongong and Bellambi in small vessels, but large sums have been appropriated by Government to improve both the harbours, and the works are making fast

The following table, extracted from the Statistical Register of New South Wales, will give an idea of the work done on these two coal-fields in 1860 —

A small quantity of coal, as shown in the above figures, is raised at Hartley, about seventy miles west of Sydney, and the indications are sufficient to denote the existence of a valuable coal-field.

South-west of Sydney there are indications of extensive coal-fields—viz., at Mitthong (70 miles distant), at the Hanging Rock (80 miles), and at Arthursleigh (90 miles). The seam at the Hanging Rock, just beyond Berrima, promises to be very productive.

At Port Stephens, about 100 miles north of Sydney, where there is a good harbour, there is a coal-field, lying between the Karuah and Manning rivers, 25 miles in extent, in which there are no less than 18 seams, of which one, measured by the Rev. W. B. Clarke, was 30 feet thick.

In the country immediately beyond the Newcastle and Maitland coalfields, seams of coal are found in the beds of almost all the creeks and rivers extending over an area of nearly 100 miles; and five seams are known to exist in localities near Maitland, at an enormous depth below the Newcastle field.

Coal seams are known to exist in many other parts of New South Wales, but sufficient information has not yet been obtained as to their real extent or richness.

In Queensland, the northernmost of the Australian colonies, valuable coal seams exist on the banks of the Bremer and Brisbane rivers, about thirty miles above Brisbane, the capital town; indeed, coal from one of the seams is now being used by the river and one of the seams is now being used by the river and coasing steamers.

Like the coal mines of Illawarra, the coal seams are accessible by adita, and the steamers on the Brisbane can load literally at the mouth of the mines; and this same facility is afforded at Lake Macquarie, the southern part of the Newcastle coal-field. The best seams, however, are found to be those situate below the water level.

There are indications of the existence of other extensive coal-fields in various parts of this fine colony, extending over thousands of square miles.

The Rev. W. B. Clarke says:—"It is manifest that there is no country on the globe occupied to so large an extent by coal formations, America excepted, as Australia, and with trifling exceptions nearly all the enormous areas occupied by these carboniferous beds belong to New South Wales and Queenaland."

Coal is found in abundance in Tasmania, and the best seams are said to correspond with some of the clean as when the best Welsh coal is used.

Captain R. G. Gilmors, who was five years in Australia—threein commandof one of the Australasian Steam Navigation Company's vessel, and during the remainder had the management of a large number of other steam vessels, writes to me as follows:

"My duties should give me a good insight into this subject, and I trust that my testimony may form a very small part of the evidence that can, and I trust will, be brought forward to overthrow the unjust prejudice that prevails against the coal of Australia. My first introduction to the colonial coal produced a most unfavourable impression on my mind, and it remained for a long time a strongly rected prejudice. We had, in the instance I speak of, been using on our route from England to Australia motisage but the best Welah coal, and we were compelled to purchase coal in Adelaide in order to consultate our voyage to Sydney. The diminished spead of the vessel caused by the bad quality of this coal gave my great annoyance, Had I then known that the coal was the remains of several cargoes which had been brought from New Bouth Wales a long time believe in feeding and stoking the coal of Navanthe prest difference of treatment sequitations of colonial coal would not have been inflavourable; but others, no doubt, heave been inflavourable; but others, to doubt, heave been inflavourable; but others, of the colonial coal would not have been inflavourable; but others, of the colonial coal would not have been inflavourable; but others, of the colonial coal would not have been a strained in a similar way. I noticed during the time that I was in Australia a gradual improvement, which I attributed to the surface seam being worked off. I considered the Australia Agricultural Company's the best, and I feel sure that for steam propose, it is equal to the north country coal used by the steamers on the east coast of England; the quantity of ash may be greater, but there is less clinker. Compared weight for weight, the Australian coal would prove slightly inferior to the Welsh in evaporating power; but taking into consideration the expression of the coal in the Australia, and the great deterioration which the work of the sea of the coal in the Australia, and the great deterioration which the coal in the Austra

I agree entirely with you that Imperial interests are hardly less concerned than colonial in this question. In the promotion of rapid communication with India, China, America, and the mother-country, as well as for naval purposes, the Australian coal will be found of incalculable value.

As an Australian, although I have no direct interest in any of the coal mines, the question is all-important to me, and I trust that the Imperial considerations involved will be deemed a sufficient excuse for my treespassing upon you and the English public at so great a length.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,

SHIPS, colonies, and commerce." was the order of the day issued by NAPOLEON after one of his most splendid victories; but Mr. Goldwin Smith, Professor of History at the University of Oxford, from that serene retreat of scholarship, has issued a manifesto indicating that the hour has come to break up the colonial empire. There is no hesitation nor limit. All the dependencies of England are marked out for severance like trees in a doomed forest. In the severance like trees in a doomed forest. In the space of a column and a half, he traverses the whole circle of the colonies, calling in at the various military stations and fortresses, and he disposes of them one and all, with the celerity of a Spanish artist. Startled by the danger of war with America, he finds our risk in the possession of Canada and her danger in the fact of her dependence. He balances in the usual way the protection of the colonies and the expense of taxation with the advantages of trade, and puts the thing curtly thus:—" If they do nothing for us, and we do advantages of trade, and puts the thing curtly thus:—"If they do nothing for us, and we do nothing for them, where is the use of continuing the connection?" The notion of colonies adopting British institutions he laughs at as utopian. The West India Islands he looks upon as a burden, and a cause of war if the Confederates achieve independence. Gibraltar, Malta, and the Ionian Isles are disposed of with equal rapidity.
We do not require them to protect our trade!
We cannot maintain them against a naval siege!
The Ionian Islands we only hold as a temporary trust, from which we are invited to escape! India we are to govern only as in the discharge of a debt, but at the sacrifice of our interest! The letter closes with an impeachment of the spirit of the British Ministry, and of the tenacity of territory in the present statesmen of the of territory in the present statesmen of the Empire.

Such is the letter which appeared in our columns of yesterday. The Times thought a communication from such a quarter required some notice, and treated the writer in its usual way. We are not surprised that this rakish style of smashing an empire should have excited some reprobation. Mr. Goldwin Smith has dealt with politics something in the same way as the MARQUIS OF WATERFORD dealt with lamps and knockers. The fraces awakens attenlamps and knockers. The fraces awakens attention, and we are astonished to find a nobleman or a professor engaged in the disorderly sport. There is indeed much more spirit than prudence, There is indeed much more spirit than prudence, much more recklessness than forecast in this mode of lopping off from the trunk the branches of an empire which has grown great because it has put forth its luxuriant foliage, and derived its strength as well as its beauty from its expansion. The old trunk may live without the branches, but it will afford no shelter, and will some day or other stand blasted and ruined amidst the now rising monarchs of the forest, which statesmen—not economists—tend and spare.

No one, however, can exempt the Times

States, and those who have to deal practically with the quertions of their time, and to hold fast advantages which have been secured by the forethought, courage, and perseverance of their predecessors.

The recklessness of assertion for which Mr. Buchanan has already obtained an unenvisible notoriety makes it generally unnecessary on this side of the world to take any notice of his reputation and his antered.

which statesmen—not economists—tend and spare.

No one, however, can exempt the Times from having called out the kind of speculation which it now so strongly deprecates and so contemptuously represses. We who watch the current of British sentiment, as expressed in the leading journal of Europe, have often noticed the random and almost contemptuous references to the colonial dominions of Great Britain. We cannot expect that British writers should study the sentiments of remote dependencies. Their inspiration is derived from other sources, and their sympathies are governed by more contiinepiration is derived from other sources, and their sympathies are governed by more conti-guous considerations. But they have, whether intentionally or not, inculcated for the last four or five years (and none more strenuously than the Times) the notion that the colonies are a burden, as well as a disgrace, and that their connection with England is sustained by motives connection with England is sustained by motives purely egotistical; that the trade flows in its present channels in obedience to the Manchester theory of cheapness; in fact, that England would gain as much and loose far less were they no longer in existence, at least as British

We need not now point out the temerity and falsehold of all these statements, because the Times as well as the DUKE of NEWCASTLE are now on their track, and will supply the neces-now on their track, and will supply the necessary evidence as well as the proper conclusion. While, however, Professor Goldwin Smith lays down the principle that England should throw off the allegiance of her colonies, or, at least, welcome any act which would save her that trouble, he assumes that there will be some great confederation which will unite the Anglo-mutual civic rights we must understand mutual civic obligations, and these imply tribunals to enforce and authority to define and perpetuate them, and thus under another form that legal subordination which is comprehended in the idea of a colonial is comprehended in the idea of a colonial empire.

Supposing such a confederation, the policy of the empire must be lodged in some one organ. Would this be anywhere but in Great Britain? Would it not, then, be equally necessary to entrust to her Government the decision of peace or war, and the determination of those relations in which the confederation should stand with the rest of the world? Or, supposing that the other members world? Or, supposing that the other members of that confederation possessed an equal voice, would not an individual member be bound to obey the general decision—a decision which must be inclined by the most powerful member of the union? In short, when the system of Mr. GOLDWIN EMITH comes to be analysed, it is found in the system of the union of it is found to be only an awkward substitution of an indefinite kind of relationship for the natural, honourable, and intelligible system which now places the local interests of a colony in its own hands, and at the same time subjects its legislation and external policy to the principles of the Imperial law and the general obligations and duties of the whole empire. Thus, so long as Mr. SMITH shrinks from the notion of casting off the colonies to stand entirely alone, and doubts their willingness to accept separation at the sacrifice of British citizenship, he does not remove a single diffi-culty in the present system of the colonial from the support and control of the central the wild kind of writing and speaking which has found patronage in some who ought to have known better was merely discussion, such principles might be regarded with indifference; but the truth is, the question is eminently practical. It is stated that Schiller's play, "The Robbers of the Rhine," was so powerful in its leaves and the statement of the s in The Robbers of the Rhine," was so powerful in its Itssons that numbers of young men quitted their friends and took to the highway, and that they did so under the inspiration of those noble sentiments which disguised the felonious character of pillage, and converted the thief into a hero. The play had to be prohibited, because, however it might exhibit the profound skill of the dramatist, its social influence was record disastrous. It is quite possible ence was most disastrous. It is quite possible that the philosophical discussion whether it is that the philosophical discussion whether it is best to smush up the empire or to permit its members to rot off at their discretion be a very innocent exercise under some circumstances. In England it is a blundering jumble of exports and imports—of colonial contributions and British pay, of prestige and glory; but to the colonies, it is a question of life and death. It now seems to be deemed necessary that the Ministers of the Crown should express some definite policy with respect to the colonial empire. They feel it now necessary to say whether the smash shall begin to-morrow or be postponed shall begin to morrow or be postponed—whether England shall have the first or the last throw—whether the thing shall be done by Mr. Spicer or Mr. Gladstone. It is quite true that SPICER or Mr. GLADSTONE. It is quite true that it may be very amusing in the city of London, but it is not at all impossible that some of the colonies will furnish a party strong enough to apply the prescription. Supposing in any such places a few score conspirators could appeal to a disorderly population, and hoist the flag of independence, what is the at itude to be taken by her Majesty's Government, or what the course to be pursued by her soldiers and loyal subjects?

Undoubtedly if these contisments are to be presented to the second supposed to the soldiers.

Undoubtedly if these gentlemen are to be taken as expositors of the policy of the empire, the man who would incur the slightest risk in arresting this anti-British demonstration would be a fool for his pains. It is true the Ministers of the Crown were outspoken, and that they should give us to understand clearly whether we may reckon in supportand support of the Government of our nativ country.

The letter of Mr. Goldwin Smith will ap-The letter of Mr. GOLDWIN SMITH will appear to all, excepting those who have a secret aspiration after the Presidential chair, not only as weak and frivolous, but as manifesting most profound ignorance of what constitutes the strength and ensures the duration of an empire. It clearly illustrates the very common difference between the men who in their closets study theories of Government and the growth of States, and those who have to deal practically with the quertions of their time, and to hold fast remarks. The editor of the Times, however, being ignorant of his reputation and his antecedents, and not unnaturally assuming that any one who wrote from the Legislative Assembly Chambers at Sydney must be a person of some mark, has given a publicity to Mr. Buchanan's name and opinions out of all proportion to their value. So ingrained, however, are Mr. Buchanan's habits of random asseveration, that hands BUCHANAN's habits of random asseveration, that he could not even write a letter of a few paragraphs to the Times without exposing his frailty. Never was the old proverb more aptly verified, "Give him rope enough and he will hang himself." A very short piece sufficed—Mr. BUCHANAN measured the length himself—but the act of felo-de-ss was decisive.

Mr. BUCHANAN writes in defence of demo-cracy, and the defence consists in an accusation against a Government which he designates as against a Government which he designates as aristocratic. Supposing the accusation to have been true, it would have been void as an argu-ment. It is no vindication of democracy to bring charges against the previous regime. The innocence of our democratic rulers is not proved by blackening the character of their pre-

But in fact the accusation is false-as false as Mr. Buchanan's accusations not unfre quently are. Mr. MACARTHUR did a service to the reputation of the colony, by stepping forward to give the assertion a prompt denial—for the accusation if true would have been a stain, not only on the character of the officials who were concerned, but also on the character of all those that trouble, he assumes that there will be some great confederation which will unite the Anglo-Saxon communities not merely in peace, but also in war—bound not only by sympathy, but also in war—bound not only by sympathy, but also by alliance, and, to some extent, by "mutual civic rights."

Mr. Goldwin Smith is not ripe for the absolute severance of the colonies from the parent state. But what we are to understand by "mutual civic rights," and "an alliance of confederate states," is not so clear. If an alliance for peace and war, will the separation give the colonies any security against the enemies of England, or relieve her—the central ally—from any obligation to defend them? By

That Mr. Buchanan should have represented as still in the prime of life a gentleman who has been dead for some years, is of a piece with the rest of his communication, as is also the dishonesty of applying the phrase "prime of life" to the age of Messrs. Dras Thomson and Plunkett, gentlemen who have spent all their best years in the public service of the colony. We believe that we are nearly accurate in saying that Mr. Dras Tromson was twenty-seven years in the public service, Mr. RIDDELL twenty-six, and Mr. Plunkett twenty-five. The pension list which Mr. Buchanan professes to regard with such horror, he never can have studied, Mr. RIDDELL's name never can have studied, Mr. RIDDELL's name never having appeared on that list since Mr. Buchanan has had a seat in Parliament. He died before the hon, member for Morpeth made his debut.

Mr. Buchanan writes to the Times express. ing unalterable affection for the mother country; yet on the next day he made a speech in his place in the Legislative Assembly in which, after prace in the Legislative Assembly in which, after expressing his opinion that the disallowance of the Chinese Bill in the mother country would lead to irstant revolt, he is reported to have added, "He hoped she would put a veto upon that measure, in order that that result might be produced." What sort of "unalterable affection" can he feel for a country which he hopes will commit an act that in his care, will be accessed. will commit an act that, in his eyes, will be of great folly or tyranny?

Mr. Buchanan dilates on the sensitive re-Mr. Buchanan dilates on the sensitive regard the Radicals always entertain for good faith in monetary transactions. If, by this, he merely means that the obligations of the public debt are honourably discharged, we entirely agree with him. But this is not a virtue belonging specially to the Radicals. No one in the whole community has ever whispered a proposal of repudiation in connection with our debentures, nor could any such proposal be received with anything but scorn. But the Radicals have not shown themselves so scrupulously nice with regard to obligations contracted within the colony. We say nothing here of the Assessment Act, because there is an ambiguity in the language of the Orders in Council which gives a colourable pretext for that tax; nor of the dishonest concealment by the Government of the despatch reserving the Royal assent to that Act to give time for the legal trial in the colony of the disputed point of law. But the new Land Act arbitrarily takes from the pastoral tenants their general pre-emptive right, simply because it would not square conveniently with the new land policy—although that right is distinctly guaranteed by the leases.

Will Mr. BUCHANAN call to mind the refusal of Captain BROWNE's pension? Mr Cowpen, the present Premier, and the head o the Radical party, not only put this pension on the list, and voted for it, but used all his in-fluence to get it passed, declaring that Captain BROWNE was, by the rules of the service, entitled to it as much as others who had already received it : that to refuse it would be dishonourable and that Captain Browne would have his remedy by an appeal to the Home Government. Yet, in spite of this, the pension was refused. The Radicals would not see the obligation; Ceptain Brownz was said to be well enough off to do without it, and to be in the prime of life, to have drawn salary for several years, &c. Others excused themselves on the ground Yet, the Assembly that thus refused an allowance of about £150, that was honorably an allowance of about £150, that was honorably cue, to an old civil servant whose office was abolished, sgreed to a pension for Dr. BLAND to the amount of £300 a-year, although that gentleman had never been in the civil service at all, and whose principal claim was that he had been a philanthropic gentleman, and was a patriot in difficulties in his old age.

May we jog Mr. BUCHANAN's memory about a patriot in difficulties in his old age.

May we jog Mr. Buchanan's memory about the Church and School lands? This is a property worth more than half a million sterling. But there is a legal doubt as to whether it is trust property, or Crown property—a doubt that ought to be settled before the legal tribunals. The Assembly wishes to settle the matter arbitrarily by declaring the land Crown property, and so getting it under its own control. Mr. Cowruz has repeatedly declared that to do so would be an act of groes repudiation. Yet, in spite of his determined opposition, his own followers have twice, by a large majority, carried a bill to give effect to their rough and ready mode of settling the question, and only the interposition of the Legislative Council prevented the bill from being passed. The attention of the Home Government has been recently called to this being passed. The attention of the Home Government has been recently called to this question, and despatches have been received, in-timating that the GOVERNOR is to withhold assent from any future bills of the same sort that night pase, until the Crown lawyers shall have had an opportunity of seeing that no rights are

These matters do not affect people beyond These matters do not anect people beyond the colony. They have no direct connection with the public debt—an obligation which no one would venture to trifle with. But they do exhibit a defective regard to private rights on the part of our elashing reformers, when such rights stand in the way of some course of action that is popular or expedient.

UNTIL the last two months the mail service has been conducted by the P. and O. Company in a very satisfactory manner as regards punctuality. But there are signs now of degeneracy. As a matter of economy, smaller vessels are being substituted in lieu of those by which the service was companied. Two voyages have been made matter of economy, smaller vessels are being substituted in lieu of those by which the service was commenced. Two voyages have been made under this new arrangement, and both of them with unsatisfactory results. The Bombay broke downunder the hard driving, and the Madras has come in several days behind her time. The opportunity given this month to merchants and others in the city to peruse and digest their correspondence has been very limited, while to the rest of the colony it has been denied altogether. The supplementary mail partly alleviates the inconvenience; but for that convenience correspondents and the Government have to pay extra. The Admiralty agent, though pressed to exercise his authority, declined to detain the outgoing steamer for another day; nor can we blame him. At this season of the year there would be great risk of the Bombay missing the mail steamer at Galle. One of the vessels until recently employed might have been trusted to do the work.

The Company receives the large subsidy of £185,000 a year. The excuse for demanding this large subsidy was, that in order to maintain the stipulated speed, vessels of large size, full power, and, therefore, of considerable coalconsuming energies gaust be employed, and that

The threatened competition in the Indian and Chinese Seas is probably leading the Company to put its best boats where the fight will be hardest, and anything is considered to be good enough for Australia, where there is no competition. The colonists, however, are not altogether without remedy. The centract is terminable at six months notice, and if delays are continuous or frequent the and if delays are continuous or frequent, the Home Government must be moved to keep the Company up to the mark, or to look about for some other contractors whose interest it would be to pay attention to the service.

FERCIAL CASE AND SECULATED SECULATION

THE QUEEN V. HARGHAYES.

This was a special case from the Sydney Quarter Sossions. Prisoner had cohabited with another man's wife, who on leaving her home had carried off certain goods the property of her husband. The indictment averred that at the time of the elopement and of the taking of the goods, adulterous intercourse between the wife and the prisoner had either taken place or was contemplated. It was shown that prisoner had sasisted the woman to put the goods on a dray, and subsequently, after cohabitation, had claimed these goods as his own. The question raised was, as to the accuracy of the chairman's direction to the jury. Whether they ought not te have been directed to find—as one of the conditions precedent to conviction—that the prisoner, in appropriating these goods, knew them to be the property of the husband.

The Attorney-General appeared for the Crown. The prisoner was unrepresented.

The Court reserved judgment:

The queen v. Davis

This was a special case on a point reserved by Mr. Justice Wise, at the Central Criminal Court. The prisoner had, with another, been convicted of an unnatural offence. At the time of committing this offence both parties concerned were prisoners at Cockatoo Island. There was not efficial record brought, before the Court, of the prisoner's conviction, but there was a statement of such conviction and of the sentence which had some five years to run. The still existing sentence of the other prisoner was just about to expire, and he was sentenced to two years panal servitude in the ordinary mode. In the case of Davia, however, his Honor, to winder the punishment really effective, had passed a sentence of two year's penal servitude to commence after the term of Davis present sentence of which have carpired. The question was whether a prospective punishment of the lained of the previous sentence and conviction as the Court could take judgement.

The QUEEN y PURNELL.

The Court reserved judgment.

THE QUEEN V PURELL.

This was a special case from the Braidwood Quarter Seasions. The facts were briefly these:—Mr. District Justice Callaghan, who was ar effice Chalrman of the Court, did not (owing to the difficulties of the road) arrive on the day when the Court was to have been spened. The Attorney-General having been communicated with by talegrams. convicted and serioncod. Judge Callaghan arrived before the business of the Superior and the processing of the serion of the ser standing practice in the British civil service to compensate those whose offices, for no fault of their own, are abolished. Indeed there is a despatch from the Duke of Newcastle to Governor Fitzroy, intimating the necessity of some such provision. Nothing is said as to the amount—that was left to the local Parlisment. But Mr. Cowper, the present radical leader, was a member of the select committee that revised the Constitution Act, and he voted for the full amount of salary.

That Mr. Buchanan should have represented as still in the prime of life a gentleman who has been dead for some years, is of a piece that rested the Constitution, as is also the dishonesty of applying the phrase "prime to fife" to the age of Messrs. Deas Thomson and Plunkett, gentlemen who have spent all their best years in the public service of the radical their best years in the public service of the colony. We believe that we are nearly accurate in saying that Mr. Deas Thomson was

Their Honors held that the evidence had been properly received, and sustained the conviction.

MANLY BEACH ON EASTER MONDAY.

To the Editio of the Herald.

Sir.,—The scene which the beach at Manly presentatowards the close of the day on our great holiday occasions (such as yesterday) beggwrs description, and passes all belief, except of those who unfortunately have been witnesses thereof. If such a state of things is persisted in, or allowed to continue, we may feel assured that the public mind will sooner or later be aroused by some most startling extastrophe, and which shall appear as the most fitting epilogue. Then, but not till them, we may expect that the civil authorities will beatir themselves, to prevent a recurrence of the scene which Manly presented yesterday evening and until nearly midnight.

From an early hour till late into the day the great ocean-going steamers (with others of less dimensions) continued to bring down their living freight of thousands upon thousands, so that there could not have been less than nine or ten thousand persons there at four of-clock.

Now, mark the rest! Towards sundown, when this great multitude sought to return home, or to Sydney, the great ocean-going steamers are withfrawn for the day; and the means of reaching Sydney devolves upon the insufficient accommodation of some two or three small boats, and which, every one eager to secure a passage for themselves, are, I need scarcely say, crowded to a frightfully-aluming extent; nor is this all, for hundreds are necessarily delayed waiting until hours after they desired to return. As upon these occasions a great many children and infants often are among the number, the consequences are attendant with as much pain and snriety as suffices to mar the beneficial effects the holiday was destined to afford.

The police on these occasions appear quite effete, whilst the regulations from both these authorities must be adopted and sufforced. Amongst others, I would suggest that the police be furnished with the number which every boat is licensed to carry, and that two constables be stationed at the gangway of each boat and landing-place: both of which I believe are calculated to lessen in some degree the disgraceful and scandalous reroes such as Manly presented yesterday evening, and long after nightfall.

VIATOR.

THE CENTRAL POLICE OFFICE.

To the Editor of the Hersid.

Sin., Nothing short of the re-construction of the Central Police department will meet the requirements of public business—the whole concern is out of joint, and it requires the utmost stretch of the greatest charity to believe that it is not the result of pre-meditated mischief. The head of the establishment is, no doubt, a gentleman—a gentleman possessing many estimable qualities, and not wanting in either ability or integrity, but whose forts is not the administration of law. Next in rank is the chief clerk—a person clevated from a subordinate desk in the Chief Secretary's office (whether to get rid of or inflict a nuisance is best known to him who made the appointment)—whose duty it is to direct operations of which he was profoundly ignorant, to the grief and injury of men who had spent many years in the office, who are masters of their duty, and who not unreasonably expected promotion on the appointment of the late chief clerk to a police magistrates in the interior. Of the demeanour of this person I have heard both professional men and unpaid magistrates complain, I cannot say whether those "complaints" were well or ill-founded. But with regard to the complain of "An Unpaid JP," I cannot see how the chief clerk is to be exonerated from blame. Is it creditable that, under the painful circumstances which necessitated the absence of the police magistrate, the chief clerk should take himself off for his Esster halidays. Does it look like a concern either for the character of the department or for the despatch of public business, that, in addition to seeking his own pleasure, he should dispense leave of absence to other clerks during the period of his own intended holiday? Is it possible that the clerk who refused to assist the magistrates the meeters of the ord

RIFLE SHOOTING.

To the Editor of the Hereta.

Sin,—In publishing accounts of rifle matches, I think it would be as well, when such accounts are not furnished by your own staff, to ascertain that they are accurate before insertion, as some people are glad of an opportunity of blowing their own trumpet through the medium of the public Press. I make these remarks in consequence of observing a very partial account of some shooting which took place at the Newtown Company's butts on Saturday last, between four members of that company. Now, whoever furnished that report might as well have given you the result of the schole of the shooting on that occasion, as, in addition to the match, you report there were six other matches shot at 500 yards, for sweepstakes by the same four gentlemen, five of which were won by the lesers of the first match, who were also disposed to make a further match for a larger amount, but which was respectfully declined.

I remain, Sir, yours obediently,

JUSTICE.

THE COWPERS.

To the Editor of the Herald.

Sin,—Although it is my rule not to answer a person when he is sangry, yet as I hope that your correspondent's anger on this subject has cooled a little, I will simply reply to his question.

I did not mention the fourth son of the late Archelescon Cowper simply because I did not know of his appointment except from your correspondent's letter; and as I know that letter to be incorrect in one of its statements I could not depend upon it for the truth of another.

But if it be true that there are four sons of a good old man holding positions of such importance and responsibility, what implety is there in saying that his memory is "honoured?"

Yours obediently,

KAPPA.

To the Editor of the Herald.

Sira,—Permit a few further suggestions on the defence of Sydney. The Botany canal seems no bad idea; and as to expense, the generations to come will resp the benefit, and should therefore pay interest on the cost, if relaed by loan.

But there is a shorter way (attended, it is true, with more engineering difficulties), namely, from Middle Harbour, beyond the Spit, by a canal into Siriut Cove. Close the present channels by rows of gigantic cheeaux de friss, shod and pointed with iron, to snag all vessels attempting to force a passage. Place a pair of floating flood-gates at the Spit, at an angle pointing to sea; work them to and fro by steam, always kept up; let there be covered-in floating batteries as well, armed with heavy guns, and the furnaces adapted to heat shot. Never open them to a stranger until she has been examined. The seaward sides to have a row of iron-pointed floating spines, to keep an enemy off, running along-side, and boarding, or sending floating combustibles. A new city might ultimately spring up on the north side of Middle Harbour, in a far more secure position than Sydney. An enemy might shell the city firm Middle Harbour if the Botany canal plan is carried out.

The Prince Consont Testimonial.—A public meeting, presided over by the major, was held at the Courthouse, on Thursday evening, at which an address of condolence to her Majesty, on the death of the Prince Consort, was submitted and unanimously adopted. It was also determined to collect subscriptions, in connection with the association formed in Sydney, for the erection of a monument to his Royal Highness.—Necessitis Chronicle.

THE MUNDER AT WOORDOMA.—We are informed that an additional clue to the perpetrator of the murder of Murphy, at Woortons, in January last, has been discovered in the neighbourhood of the hut where the murder was committed. A shirt stained with blood has been found, which, we understand, has been identified as one belonging to the lad Macdonald, who is at present in the lock-up at Moulsmein, charged with the murder.—Passoral Times.

writers appear to me to resolve themselves into the fear of losing "prestige," and sinking into an "lasular position."

"Prestige" goes with real strength, and with real strength alone. What would be thought of a general who shouls occupy more ground than he could cover, exhaust his recources, and wear out his men before the day of battle, in order to gain "prestige" in the eyes of his opponent? What was our "prestige" in the eyes of his opponent? What was our "prestige" in America worth when, "to the diagrace of our diplomary," as the Times says, "we compromised the frontier and the future of Canada by submitting to the Ashburton treaty? The moral of this event is not effaced because, when the Americans have a great rebellion on their hands, we have succeeded, with the opinion and interests of all Europe to back us, in extorting reparation for a flagrant wrong.

One of my critics, indeed, drops the mystical torm "prestige," and tells me in good plain English that what he thinks so valuable and wishes so much to preserve is "apparent power," When we can see through the "appearance" of power, and coolly own to ourselves that we do see through it, will not our enemies have the sense to do the same? Wooden srilliery has been useful as a stratagem in war; but I never heard that it was useful, or that anything was risked by a wise commander to preserve it, after the enemy had found out that it was wooden.

Is "apparent power" really the object which the statesmen, in their importal policy, pursue? Is this all that we gain by submitting to an immense trantion." How proper pays in the solid elements of strength and prosperity as well as in accurity, and receive in return "apparent powers": "It has been said that history is little more than a record of the miseries inflicted on the many by the passions of the few. I fear this is not the less true because the "few," instead of being feudal lords, are now the Clubs and the Times.

Oxford, February 14, 1862.

P. S. Since the above was written I have read the speech of the Duke of Newcastle at the Australian dinner. He says that the feeling of the colonies towards the mother-country at this moment is universally excellent. No doubt it is; and of this happy state of things the policy, virtually tending to emancipation, which the Duke, as Colonial Secretary, has steadily and magnanimously pursued, is a main cause. Now, then, is the time to take the stay which must some day be taken, and to which the Duke's policy has led the way, of freely bestowing independence, since it can now be done in the fulness of mutual confidence and affection.

The arguments which the Duke draws in favour of dependency from the amount of the Colonial trade are not to the point, unless it can be shown that the trade in some way depends upon the political connexion. The amount of our trade with the United States before and since their severance from the government of the mother country proves the reverse to be the fact.

The Duke says that the colonies are adopting our system of law. So have the Americans adopted our system of law. And the Australians, equally with the Americans, have deviated from "English institutions" into universal suffrage.

The Duke tells us an instance of the effective influence of the home Government over the colonies, that in one instance his advice was followed by a colonial logislature is altering a money bill. But was the advice of the home Government followed when the Canadian legislature, "without the slightest justification," to repeat the words of the Simes in proced a protective tariff on British goods? The attering a money bill. But was the advice of the home Government followed when the Canadán legislature, " without the slightest justification," to repeat the words of the Times, imposed a protective tariff on British goods? Tha Times, commenting on the Duke's speech, tells us that the colonies "cheerfully defer to counsels cheerfully given." Did they "cheerfully defer to this important instance? If I understand the Duke rightly, the colonists, according to his view, are to remain subjects of the British Crown, but with power to renounce their allegiance whenever they see fit Kot a shot is to be fired, not a bayonet is to be pointed in case they at any time decide on separation. This arrangement, in the first place, does not seem to add much to the dignity of the British Crown. In the second place it virtually provides that if separation over does take place, it shall be from disaffection, and therefore in a hostile form.

place, it shall be from disaffection, and therefore in a hostile form.

a The Buke hopes we shall never "discard" the colonies. They would no more be "discarded" by omancipation than a heir is "discarded" when he comes of ago.

I may remark that, in commenting on the Duke's speech, the Times admits under a thin verbal disguise the very things which it reviled me for saying a few days before. I presume, at least, that the "exclusive custom" which it now allows to have been an object of our colonial system does not materially differ from the "commercial monopoly" which, we were told the other day, only an ignorunt "professor" could suppose to have anything to do with the matter.

I am a cordial, though humble, well-wis'are to Lord Palmeraton's Government. But if the Türkes thinks is blasphemy to suppose that Lord Palmeraton can be tempted into an obsolete and essential weak policy of argrandisement, I recommend it to refer to its ow a stricles on that statesman in the days when, though I as independent of principles, it was more independent of r orsons.

and patrons; those who do so, will find the same comfortable accommodation they always found, when he kept the inn formerly.

Passengers travelling per mail, which changes horses at the above inn, may rely on finding a good clean substantial breakfast always ready for them.

Cleanlinese, civility, moderate charges, and the best of food, liquors, and forage, combined with the attendance of civil and obliging servants, will, it to be hoped, maure Joseph Levy at least a small portion of that extensive patronage he come had.

Berrima, 19th April, 1862.

O'I ICE to the PUBLIC.—HENRY QUINLAN, in returning thanks to his friends and the public generally for the liberal patronage bestowed on him, begs respectfully to inform them that, in connection with his establishment in Market-street, he has rented the premises in William-street, Woolleomeoloo, occupied by the late Mr. Clinton, butcher, where he intends carying on business in the same line; and hopes, from strict attention and with the advantage of the best article at the lowest rate passible, to merit a share of that patronage he has so long been favoured with.

LA and PERRINS' celebrated WORCESTER-BHIRE SAUCE, pronounced by connoisseurs to be the only good Sauce, and applicable to every variety of dish. Extract of a letter from a medical gentleman at Madraa, to his brother at Worcester, May, 1851. "Tell Les and Perrin that their asuce is highly esteemed in India, and is, in my opinion, the most palatable as well as the most wholesome sauce that "seade."

EXTENSIVE FRAUDS.

L. and P. having discovered that several of the foreign markets have been supplied with spurious imitations of their Worcestershire Sauce, the labels of which closely rescable those of the genuine sauce, and in one or more instances with the names of L. and P. forged, they have deemed it their duty to caution the public, and to request purchasers to see that the names of Les and Perrins are upon the wrapper, label, stopper, and bottles.

L. and P. further give notice that they will proceed against any one who may infringe upon their right, either by manufacturing or vending such imitations, and have instructed their correspondents in the various parts of the world to advise them of such infringements.

TO THE PUBLIC.

With reference te the above notification of partnership, we would gratefully profier our thanks to the numerous friends of the old firm, and have now the pleasure to samounce the near completion of the EXTENSIVE ALTERATIONS and ADDITIONS made by us to the MONSTER CLOTHING HALL, which we have striven to make in its every detail worthy the large amount of partnerse so liberally bestowed. We may truthfully assert that the arrangements we are now perfecting will present facilities for selection, both in the ready-made and ordered departments, hitherto unapproached in the Australian colonies; our large resources and many years experience having been fully brought to bear in making each branch of our trade perfect as that enjoyed by our "Home" "stablishments.

Our new premises will BE-OPEN for general purposes next SATURDAY IN EVENTING, April 20th. In the meantime, to prevent disappointment to our customers, and consequent injury to our own interests, business will be conducted as usual in the up-stair show and sutting rooma. In conduction, with reiterated thanks for past favours, and assurance of our best efforts to merit future patronage, we have the honour to subscribe ourselves.

Your most obedient servants.
